EVOLUTION OF COMMERCE EDUCATION: REFLECTING ON 26 YEARS OF CHANGE AND ADAPTATION

SOME Q&A WITH DR. TENALI DEENA ELIZABETH

Q. How has your research on managing NPAs in cooperative banks impacted your teaching and perspective on commerce?
Dr. Tenali Deena Elizabeth: "My research on the management of NPAs in cooperative banks has profoundly impacted my teaching and perspective on commerce. Educating students from rural backgrounds, many of whom are children of farmers, I emphasize the crucial role of cooperative banks in providing agricultural loans and the importance of timely loan repayment. During my research, I interacted with over 500 farmers in Krishna District, gaining valuable insights into their challenges and needs. This experience allows me to teach practical solutions for preventing NPAs in cooperative banks, making the subject matter relatable and actionable for my students. I aim to equip and equip my students to contribute meaningfully to their communities by connecting theory to real-world applications."

Q. What significant changes have you observed in commerce education over your 26-year career?
Dr. Tenali Deena Elizabeth: "I integrate real-world financial issues into my curriculum by linking theoretical concepts with practical examples relevant to students' backgrounds. For instance, I discuss how cooperative banks support farmers with loans for agricultural tools and emphasize the importance of loan repayment to prevent NPAs. I also incorporate insights from my research, where I interacted with over 500 farmers in Krishna District, to provide students with real-life perspectives. Additionally, I leverage initiatives like the Vidya Deevena and Vaithi Deevena schemes by the Government of AP, which offer free education, to highlight current financial policies. The new NEP focuses on skill enhancement courses, EDC courses, and internships further prepares students to tackle industry challenges not just in macroeconomics."

Q. How do you integrate real-world financial issues into your curriculum to prepare students for current industry challenges?
Dr. Tenali Deena Elizabeth: "Over my 26-year career in commerce education, I've witnessed significant transformations in student demographics and educational methodologies. When I started teaching in the early 1990s, there was a robust demand for B.Com courses across both Telugu and English mediums. Admissions was competitive based on merit, and classrooms were filled. However, post-2021, especially in the aftermath of COVID-19, recruiting students has become increasingly challenging. Colleges now require proactive campaigning to attract enrollees. The shift towards English as the medium of instruction, initiated by the AP Government, initially posed a hurdle as students struggled with English proficiency, affecting pass rates. These changes have necessitated adaptations in teaching approaches, emphasizing language support and innovative instructional methods to maintain academic standards and student engagement in a more diverse and competitive educational landscape."
